TELECOMMUTING HEALTHCARE JOBS

HEALTHCARE INDUSTRY OVERVIEW

Telehealth, which is also known as telemedicine, is a practical, modern, alternative healthcare arrangement for patients who need the flexibility and affordability of access to medical care without the traditional wait in a doctor's office or the increased costs associated with in-person visits to a healthcare provider.

Remote healthcare jobs are available in many specialties for licensed professionals to work remotely either as their primary mode of employment or as a supplement to their current practice or healthcare job.

Telecommuting healthcare positions are readily available to physicians, nurse practitioners, nurses, physician assistants, radiologists, counselors, nutritionists, psychiatrists, therapists and nearly any other type of healthcare professional who consults with patients and could perform those same duties over the phone and/or via video conferencing technology.

Healthcare consistently remains a top five remote work career category among the more than 40 industries from which we source telecommute jobs.
